FAIR'Y (fär'e), n. [Low L. fato, fatare, to enchant, from L. fatum, fate; It. fata; Sp. hada; Fr. fée] (Myth.)

1. † Illusion; enchantment. Gower.

2. † The land of illusions, or of the fays; fairy-land. Chaucer.

3. † The people of fairy-land. Drayton.

4. An imaginary diminutive being, in human shape, formerly supposed to possess certain powers over mankind, which were often exercised for mischief, but in general with more of humor than malignity; a fay; an elf.

“During the sixteenth century, this word was used to signify the fays of romance, or human beings endowed with powers beyond those allotted to men.” Keightley.

Shakespeare uses fairy once in the sense of an enchantress. — See Antony & Cleopatra, act. iv. scene 3.

“Like every other word in extensive use, whose derivation is not historically certain, the word fairy has obtained various and opposite etymons. Meville Cassaubon, and those who, like him, deduce every thing from a classic source, however unlikely, — derive fairy from φῆρ, a Homeric name of the Centaurs; or think that fée, whence fairy, is the last syllable of nymphæ. Sir W. Ouseley derives it from the Hebrew peér, to adorn; Skinner, from the A. S. faran, to fare, to go; others, from fares, companions, or think that fairy-folk is quan fair-folk. But no theory is so plausible, or is supported by such names, as that which deduces the English fairy from the Persian peri. It is said that the paynim foe, whom the warriors of the cross encountered in Palestine, spoke only Arabic, the alphabet of which language, it is well known, possesses no p, and therefore organically substitutes an f in such foreign words as contain the former letter; consequently, peri became, in the mouth of an Arab, feri, whence the crusaders and pilgrims, who carried back to Europe the marvellous tales of Asia, introduced into the West the Arabo-Persian word fairy. All that is wanting to this very plausible theory is something like proof. — Leaving, then, these sports of fancy, we will discuss the true origin of the words used in the Romance languages to express the being which we name fairy. These are, Fr. fée, fee; Provencal, fada; Sp. hada; It. fata. In the middle ages, there was in use a Latin verb, fatere, derived from fatum or fata, and signifying to enchant. This verb was adopted by the Italian, Provencal, and Spanish languages: in French it became, according to the analogy of that tongue, faer, fier. From this verb the French made a substantive, faerie, fierie, illusion, enchantment, the meaning of which was afterwards extended, particularly after it had been adopted into the English language.” Keightley.

FAIR'Y, a. 1. Relating, or belonging, to fairies. “Fairy valleys.” Collins.

2. Given by fairies. “Fairy gold.” Shak.

Fairy ring, or circle, a circular piece of ground in the fields, encompassed with a border of greener and fresher grass than that of the centre, formerly supposed to have been occasioned by the midnight dances of the fairies. Craig.

FÄR'THER, ad. compar.: superl. FÄR'THEST. [A. S. feor, feorr, feoran, far; feoræst, farthest.] At a greater distance; to a greater distance; more remotely; beyond:—moreover; further.

Farther and further, words of the same signification, used indiscriminately:—both are in good use; and it is difficult to say which is the more common. Dr. Johnson says of farther, "This word is now generally considered as the comparative degree of far; but by no analogy can far make farther or farthest; it is therefore probable that the ancient orthography was nearer the true, and that we ought to write farther or farthest, from forth, forther, forthest [forther, forther, Sax.], the o and u, by resemblance of sound, being first changed in speech, and afterwards in books."

Walker remarks that, though "farther and further are very irregular branches of far, they are grafted on it by use, and cannot be altered without diverting the plain tendency of the language.—Though further passes very well for farther when far is out of sight, we feel the utmost repugnance at saying, 'Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther.'" Smart says, "Farther is the genuine Saxon word, but further takes the precedence in modern use."—See FURTHER.

FÄR'THER, a. compar. 1. More remote; further. "Let me add a farther truth." Dryden.

"We are not only at a fault, in the hunter's term, but at a rest, as if we were playing at tennis." Sir H. Wotton. — To find fault, to express disapprobation or dissatisfaction. "They wholly mistake the nature of criticism, who think its business is principally to find fault." Dryden. — To find fault with, to censure; to blame. "They never complain, nor find fault with the times." Swift.

— "Dr. Johnson tells us that the l in this word is sometimes sounded and sometimes mute, and that, in conversation, it is generally suppressed. To this Dr. Kenrick adds, that it is needlessly suppressed. None of our lexicographers have marked this letter mute but Mr. Sheridan. Mr. Nares says, the word is pronounced both ways, and leaves it undetermined; but Mr. Elphinstone decides positively against retaining the l, even in writing; his reasons are, that, as the French have left out the l in their antiquated faulx, we ought to leave it out in our English word, which was derived from their ancient one. This reasoning, however, I think, is not conclusive. The l in question has nothing harsh or uncommon in its sound, and, if it were mute, would desert its relation to the Latin falsitas, and form a disgraceful exception; and, if poets have sometimes dismissed it, to rhyme the word with thought, sought, &c., they have as readily admitted it to rhyme with malt, salt, and asault.

"Which of our thrum-capped ancestors found fault For want of sugar-tongs, or spoons for salt?" King, Walker.

FÉE, n. [Goth. faihu, cattle; A. S. feoh; Dut. vee; Ger. vieh; Dan. fa; Icel. fi; Sw. få. — "This word [feoh] is one of the oldest in all the European languages. Most likely, the idea of animation and motion is predominant in all the preceding words. Cattle was the first kind of property; and, by bartering, this word came to signify money in general." Bosworth. — The etymology of fee, in its legal sense, is much disputed. Sumner, Johnson, Todd, Spelman, and Burrill derive the word from A. S. feoh, a stipend, a reward; Richardson, Webster, Smart, and Brady, from the L. fides, faith; It. fede; Sp. fe; Fr. foi; Cowel, Coke, and Bouvier, from Fr. fief; Palgrave, Spence, and Brande, from the Græco-Latin emphiteusis of the Roman law; Calvin, from the Ger. fahde, war; others, from L. fedus, a compact. Crabb considers it a corruption of freud. Burrill remarks: "The first form of feoh, as a term of law, seems to have been the Fr. fief. From this, it is not improbable, the word fee was formed by the Normans, and introduced into England, the Scotch adopting, with less alteration of sound, the form feu. In point of sense, the meaning of feoh accords entirely with the essential idea of the feudal grant of land; viz.: an interest in land held as a stipend, wages, or reward for military service, being in the nature of a consideration, and therefore considered more a matter of right than favor." — See FEOFF, and FEOUD.]
1. A fixed or gratuitous compensation for services, particularly of official and professional men; a charge; reward; bill. Pitt.

2. (Law.) In feudal law, a stipendiary estate held of a superior by service; a stipendiary estate held by inheritance;—in early English law, that which one holds of another by service; a certain quantity of land held on condition of service, or held as an inheritance;—in modern English law, an estate of inheritance, held mediately or immediately of the sovereigns;—in American law, an estate of inheritance of which the holder has the entire disposal without condition, and which is transmissible to his heirs.—See FEE-SIMPLE, and FEE-TAIL. Burrill.

FEÛ (fū), n. [Low L. feudum.—See FEE, and FEUD.] (Scot. Law.) A free and gratuitous right to lands, made to one for service to be performed by him; or a tenure, in which the vassal makes a return in grain or money. Scotch Dict.

FEÛD (fud), n. [A. S. fæthh, or fæthg; fian, to hate; Dut. veede; Ger. fehde; Dan. feide; Icel. fæd; Sw. fejd.] A quarrel; a contention;—particularly a deadly quarrel between families or clans, or a quarrel not to be satisfied but with blood. "The feuds of Rome." Addison.

Syn.—See QUARREL.

FEÛD (fud), n. [Low L. feudum, feodium; Fr. feif; Scotch feu.—See FEE.] (Law.) A right which a vassal had in land, or some other immovable thing of his lord's, to use the same and take the profits thereof hereditarily, rendering unto his lord such feudal duties and services as belonged to military tenure, the mere property of the soil always remaining unto the lord; a fief; a fee. Burrill.

§ The ultimate root of the word is probably the A. S. feoh, a stipend or reward.—"Taking feoh as the root, a slight change in the letters, and a much slighter one in the sound, produce feu, the Scotch word. These two forms Latinized become feodium and feudum respectively; the letter d being introduced, as Spelman observes, for euphony. The Fr. form, feif, is the same word in different letters, the change from final u to f being a common and very natural one. In this way all the old forms are very simply accounted for. The objection to emphyteusis [pronounced in the lower age of Latinity emphyteusis] signifying not only a lease of land for agricultural purposes, but a lease for a very long term, if not in perpetuity, which is far from agreeing with the nature of the first feudal grants. The same objection appears to be applicable to the word fides, adopted by Webster. If fides (faith) constituted so essential an idea in the nature of the feudal grant, it is probable that such grant would have been at first called in Latin feudum, instead of beneficium. But the word feudum does not, according to the best authority, occur in records until the eleventh century, long after the establishment of the system." Burrill.—"Another derivation, recently suggested, is from the Irish fuadh, fuadh signifying, in the Breton laws, a stranger who enjoyed land within the domains of a clan, and the tenure by which he enjoyed it." Brande.

FEÛ'DAL, a. [Low L. feudalis; It. feudale; Sp. feudal; Fr. féodal.] Pertaining to fees, fiefs, or feuds:—relating to feudalism, or tenures by military service; noting land held of another by service;—opposed to allodial. Robertson.

FEÛ'DAL-ĪSM, n. The feudal system; the system of feuds or fiefs; that is, estates in land held of a superior on condition of military service.

As feudalism had its origin in France, and took its greatest development there, French became its universal language. T. Wright.

§ "Feudalism sprang up in the fifth century, when the Goths, Vandals, Franks, Huns, and Lombards over-ran Europe. These nations made it a principle that all conquered lands should be divided among the chief officers; these, again, divided their shares among the officers of a second rank, who divided in like manner to a third rank, &c. These stipends of lands were termed feuda, fiefs, or feuds, and were held on the condition above mentioned." Ogilvie.

FEÛ-DĀL'I-TY, n. The state of being feudal; the feudal system; feudalism. Burke.

 1. The edible part of grain reduced to powder; the finer part of meal separated from the bran by sifting or bolting; meal.
 2. Any thing resembling flour.
Flour and flower, now regarded as different words, are etymologically the same, but are used in different senses. Flour is found in Bailey's Dictionary, with the definition of "the fine part of ground corn;" but it is wanting in Johnson's Dictionary, and in most of the other English dictionaries earlier than that of Johnson. Johnson and the other lexicographers give to flower the different meanings which are given to both forms. But the distinction between the spelling of flour from wheat, and the flower of a plant, is fully established by common usage.

FLŪ'ID-IZE, v. a. To convert into a fluid. Ch. Ob.

FLŪ'ID-NESS, n. Quality of being fluid; fluidity. FLŪKE (24), n. [Dut. ploeg, a plough; Ger. pflug, Skinner. "More probably Ger. flug, a wing." Ogilvie.] [Written also flook.]

1. (Naut.) The broad part or arm of an anchor, which takes hold of the ground.
2. (Mining.) An instrument for cleansing a hole before blasting. Weale.
3. (Zool.) An obovate flat worm, an inch in length and nearly an inch broad, sometimes found in the gall-bladder of man, whence it occasionally passes into the intestinal canal; and it also infests sheep and other animals; gourd-worm; fluke-worm. Dunglison.
4. (Whaling.) pl. The tail of the whale.

FLŪKE, n. [A. S. flocc.] (Ich.) A kind of flat-fish resembling the flounder; a turbot; a flawk; Platessa maximus. Eng. Cyc.

FLŪKE'-WORM (-würm), n. A worm that infests sheep; gourd-worm; a fluke. Booth.

FLŪ'KY, a. Formed like or having a fluke. Rowe.

FLŪME, n. [L. flumen; fluo, to flow. — A. S. flum.] 1. † A river; a stream. Weckliffe.

2. The water-passage of a mill; a water-channel.

† FLŪ'M-NOŪS, a. [L. flumineus.] Relating to, or abounding with, rivers. Blount.

FLŪM'MER-Y, n. [Probably a corruption of frummenty. Richardson. — W. Wymry.]

1. A kind of jelly or food made of flour or meal. Locke.
2. Fulsome flattery or obsequiousness; adulation. S. H. Cox.

FLŪNG, i. & p. from fling. See FLING.

FLŪNK'Y, n. 1. A servant in livery; a lackey. 2. A mean-spirited person; a servile follower; — used contemptuously. Jamieson.

3. Among stock-brokers, one who is easily imposed upon; a dupe. [U. S.] Bartlett.

FLŪNK'Y-ISM, n. The character or quality of a flunky. Dublin Rev. Ec. Rev.

Sheet flunkiness, not genuine reverence, to use a word with which Mr. Carlyle has enriched our vocabulary. Genl. Mag.

FLŪ-O-BŌ'RATE, n. (Chem.) A combination of fluoboric acid with a base. Craig.

FLŪ-O-BŌ'RIC, a. (Chem.) Noting an acid obtained in a gaseous form, by heating to redness a mixture of dry boracic acid and powdered fluor-spar. Graham.

FLŪ-O-PHŌS'PHATE, n. A combination of fluorine and phosphoric acids with a base. Craig.

FLŪ'QR, or FLŪ'QR-SPÄR, n. (Min.) A fluete of lime, a mineral found in many parts of the earth, and in great abundance in Derbyshire, Cornwall, and Durham, England, and often very beautiful; — used as a flux for certain ores. P. Cyc.

FLŪ'ŌR ÄL'BUS. (Med.) A disease of females; whites; leucorrhœa. Dunglison.

FLŪ-O-RĒS'CENCE, n. (Chem.) The diffusion of light and change of color which takes place at the surface of some liquids and solids in consequence of a change in the refrangibility of the different rays. Graham.

FLŪ-O-RĒS'CENT, a. (Chem.) Pertaining to fluorescence. Graham.

FLŪ-ŌR'IC, a. [It. fluorico; Fr. fluorique.] (Chem.) Noting an acid obtained from fluor-spar and sulphuric acid. Francis.

FLŪ'QR-IDE, n. A combination of fluorine with a base. Francis.

FLŪ'QR-INE, n. (Chem.) A simple elementary gaseous body obtained from fluor-spar and a few other minerals. Brande.

FLŪ'QR-OŪS, a. Obtained from or containing fluor. Brande.

FLŪ-O-SİL'I-CATE, n. (Chem.) A compound of fluosilicic acid and a base. Smart.

FLŪR'-BIRD, n. The decoy-bird. Goldsmith.

FLŪR'RY, n. [Perhaps a corruption of fuster. Todd: — or of futter. Richardson.]

1. A gust or sudden burst of wind; a hasty blast; a flaw; a squall.

The boat was overset by a sudden flurry from the north. Swift.

2. Hurry; a violent commotion; agitation; confusion. "A flurry of spirits." Swinburne.

FLŪR'RY, v. a. To put in a state of agitation; to alarm; to confuse. Swinburne.

FLŪSH, v. n. [Ger. fließen, to flow; fluss, a river. — It. fluo; Sp. flujo; Fr. flux. — See FLUX.]

[Flushed; pp. FLUSHING, FLUSHED.]

1. To flow and spread suddenly and with violence; to rush. Mortimer.

2. To hasten; to hurry; to fly.

The clouds that pass
For ever flushing round a summer sky. Thomson.

3. To redden, glow, or shine suddenly.

A burning purple flushes o'er my face. Rowe.

FLŪSH, v. a. 1. To color; to redden suddenly.

Nor flush with shame the passing virgin's cheek. Gay.

2. To elate; to elevate; to animate; to excite. "Flushed with great victories." Atterbury.

3. To cleanse by a stream of water mechanically applied, as an obstructed sewer, or the like place. Ogilvie.

FLŪSH, a. 1. Fresh; full of vigor; vigorous.

With all his crimes broad blown, and flush as May. Shak.

2. Affluent; abounding; plentifully supplied.

Pin-money: no, no; country ladies are not so flush of it. Vanburgh.

3. Generous; liberal; free; prodigal. Craig.

4. Hasty; confident; conceited; assured.

"Flush youth revolt." Shak.

5. (Car.) Even, or in the same plane with; having a continuity of surface with.

The panel of a door is said to be flush when fixed level with the margin, and not sunk below it. Ogilvie.

Flush deck, (Naut.) an even deck from stem to stern; a deck without a half-deck or fore-castle. Burn.

FLŪSH, n. 1. A sudden flow of blood to the face; a suffusion of the face with redness; redness.

There anger's dark and fiercer flush. Scott.

2. Afflux; sudden impulse. "In the flush of his extravagances." L'Estrange.

3. Growth; abundance; plenty; flood.

But all the bloomy flush of life is fled. Goldsmith.

4. A term for a number of ducks. Spenser.

5. A run of cards of the same suit. Johnson.

FLŪSHED (flisht), p. a. 1. Reddened suddenly; suffused with blood, as the face.

2. Elated; animated; excited.

3. Suddenly aroused and on the wing, as a covey of partridges when surprised. Mansuader.

FLŪSH'ING-LY, ad. In a flushing manner. Clarke.

FLŪSH'NESS, n. The quality of being flush or fresh; freshness; redness; vigor. Bp. Gardiner.

FLŪS'TER, v. a. [Probably a corruption of flush. Richardson.]

[Flustered; pp. FLUSTERING, FLUSTERED.] To make hot and rosy, as with drinking; to confound; to hurry. Shak.

FLŪS'TER, v. n. To be in a bustle or hurry; to be heated and confused. South.

FLŪS'TER, n. Heat and confusion; agitation; commotion. Taitler.

FLŪS-TER-Ä'TION, n. Hurry; confusion; sudden impulse. [Low.] Brockett.

FLŪS'TERED (-terd), a. Heated and confused, as with liquor. Cavthorne.

FLŪS'TRA, n. [L.] (Zool.) A genus of coralline Bryozoa, familiarly termed sea-mats, or white sea-weeds. Milne Edwards.

FLŪTE, n. [Low L. flauta; flō, flatus, to blow; It. flauto; Sp. flauta; Fr. flûte. — Dut. fluit; Ger. flöte; Dan. flöite.]

1. (Mus.) A wind-instrument with holes and keys on the side; — generally made of wood.

2. (Arch.) An upright channel on the shaft of a column, like the concavity of a flute when divided lengthwise. Weale.

3. A channel or groove in the muslin of a lady's ruff. Clarke.

4. [A corruption of float.] (Naut.) A store-ship with flat ribs or floor-timbers. Burn.

5. A long, thin French roll eaten at breakfast. Simmonds.

Armed in flute, (Naut.) with the lower deck guns removed. Burn.

FLŪTE, v. a. [i. FLUTED; pp. FLUTING, FLUTED.] To form channels, as in a column. Cotgrave.

FLŪTE, v. n. To play on the flute. Chaucer.

FLŪT'ED, a. Having channels, as a column. Crabb.

FLŪTE'NIST, n. A flute-player. [R.] Jodrell.

FLŪTE'-PLÄY-ER, n. One who plays on the flute. Gurney.

FLŪT'ER, n. 1. One who plays on the flute; a flutist; a flautist. Cotgrave.

2. One who grooves metals. Simmonds.

3. One who gauffers or plaits. Simmonds.

FLŪTE'-STÖP, n. (Mus.) A range of wooden pipes in an organ, giving a soft, flute-like sound. Dwight.

FLŪT'ING, n. A channel on a pillar or a ruff; fluted work. Evelyn.

FLŪT'IST, n. [Fr. flutiste.] A player on the flute; a fluter; a flautist. Smart.

FLŪT'TER, v. n. [A. S. fleotan, to float; Dut. vleden; Fr. floyer; Ger. fluten. — Fr. flotter, to float.] [i. FLUTTERED; pp. FLUTTERING, FLUTTERED.]

Thou'rt nightly seen to add
One insect to the fluttering crowd. Byron.

FLŪT'TER, v. a. To throw into disorder; to disturb; to confuse; to agitate. Shak. Milton.

FLŪT'TER, n. 1. Quick and irregular motion; agitation. "The flutter of a fan." Addison.

2. Disorder; confusion; hurry. Pope.

FLŪT'TER-ER, n. One who flutters. Warburton.

FLŪT'TER-ING, n. 1. A flapping, or quick motion, as of the wings of a bird; flutter. Evelyn.

2. Internal agitation; disorder of mind. "Flutterings of conscience." Fellham.

FLŪT'TER-ING, p. a. Making a flutter; moving irregularly; agitating; confusing.

FLÜT'TER-ING-LY, ad. In a fluttering manne.
FLÜ'TY, a. Soft like the tone of a flute. Clarke.
FLÜ'VJ-AL, a. [L. fluvialis; It. fluviale; Sp. & Fr. fluvial.] Relating to rivers. Blount.
FLÜ'VJ-AL-IST, n. One who treats of rivers, or explains the phenomena of streams. Clarke.
FLÜ-VJ-ÄT'IC, a. [L. fluvialis; fluvius, a river.] Belonging to rivers; fluvial. [R.] Bailey.
FLÜ'VJ-Ä-TILE, a. [L. fluvialis; fluvius, a river; It. & Fr. fluviale.] Belonging to rivers; fluvial. Lyell.
FLÜ'VJ-Ö-MÄ-RINE', a. [L. fluvius, a river, and marinus, marine.] (Geol.) Noting such formations as have been deposited by the agency of rivers, at the bottom of the sea, at a greater or less distance from their mouths. Craig.
FLÜX, n. [L. fluxus; fluo, to flow; It. flusso; Sp. flujo; Fr. flux.]
 1. The act of flowing, or moving as a fluid; a flow. "No noise, no flux of waters." Beau. & Fl.
 2. The act or the process of passing from one state to another; change.
 Languages are in a perpetual flux. Henry. Felton.
 3. The rise or flow of the tide, in opposition to the ebb or reflux. Louth.
 4. What flows or is discharged from bodies; excrement. Shak.
 5. Concourse; confluence. Shak.
 6. (Med.) Dysentery; diarrhoea. "Bloody flux is synonymous with dysentery." Hoblyn.
 7. (Metallurgy.) Fusion; reduction or conversion of ores to metal;—any substance or mixture used to promote the fusion of metallic ores, as carbonate of potash, or white flux, equal parts of nitre and tartar deflagrated, or black flux, and limestone, fluor-spar, borax, and several metallic oxides. Ure.
FLÜX, a. Flowing; inconstant. [R.] Bolingbroke.
FLÜX, v. a. [i. FLUXED; pp. FLUXING, FLUXED.]
 1. To melt; to fuse. Moral State of Eng. 1670.
 2. To clear or cleanse out.
 'Twas he that gave our senate purges,
 And fluxed the house of many a Burgess. Hudibras.
 3. † To eject by spitting; to salivate. South.
FLUX-ÄTION, n. The state or the act of passing away. [R.] Leslie.
FLÜX-I-BIL'I-TY, n. [It. fusibilità; Sp. fluibilidad.] Aptness to flow or melt. [R.] Cockram.
FLÜX-I-BLE, a. [It. fusibile; Sp. fluxible.] Capable of flowing, fusing, or changing. [R.] Howell.
FLÜX-I-BLE-NESS, n. The state of being fluxible. [R.] Scott.
FLÜX'ION (flük'shun), n. [L. fluxio; fluo, fluxus, to flow; It. flusso; Sp. & Fr. fluxion.]
 1. The act of flowing. Cotgrave.
 2. That which flows. Wiseman.
 3. Fusion; the running of metals into a fluid state. Craig.
 4. (Med.) A flow of blood or other humor towards any organ with greater force than is natural. Dunglison.
 5. (Math.) A quantity infinitely small, or less than any assignable magnitude; a differential.—pl. A method of calculation based on the idea of motion.
 Any curve may be conceived as generated by a point moving with uniform velocity in a fixed direction and having also a variable motion, lateral with respect to this direction and governed by the law of the curve. The infinitely small element of the curve generated during an assumed infinitesimal period of time is called the fluxion. This conception of motion and rate of increase may be extended to all species of magnitudes, and even to algebraic expressions. Eliot.
 The method of fluxions differs from that of the differential calculus in no respect but that of notation.
FLÜX'ION-ÄL, a. Fluxionary. Craig.
FLÜX'ION-Ä-RY (flük'shun-ä-rē), a. [Fr. fluxionnaire.] Relating to fluxions. Berkeley.
FLÜX'ION-IST (flük'shun-ist), n. (Math.) One skilled in fluxions. Shak.
† FLÜX'IVE, a. Flowing; not solid. Shak.
† FLÜX'URE (flük'shur), n. 1. The act or the power of flowing; fluxion. B. Jonson.

2. Fluid matter; that which flows. Drayton.
FLY (flī), v. n. [A. S. fleogan; Frs. flega; Dut. vliegen; Ger. fliegen; Dan. flye; Icel. fluga; Sw. fluga.] [i. FLEW; pp. FLYING, FLOWN.]
 1. To move through the air with wings.
 Fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament Gen. 1. 20.
 2. To move or pass with the swiftness of a bird on the wing; to soar; to mount.
 Man is born unto trouble as the sparks fly upward. Job. 7.
 Turn back, and fly, like ships before the wind. Shak.
 3. To break or part suddenly.
 Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.
 4. To flutter; to float in the air; to wave; as, "With colors flying."
 5. To flee; to run away; to escape.
 And makes us rather hear those hills we have left, than see them. Shak.
 To fly at, to spring with violence upon.—To fly in the face of, to insult; to act in defiance. "When you will either neglect him or fly in his face." Swift.—To fly off, to revolt.—To fly open, to burst open; to open suddenly.—To fly out, to burst into passion or license.—To let fly, to discharge;—to let go suddenly.
FLY, v. a. 1. To shun; to avoid; to escape from; to flee from. "Sleep flies the wretch." Dryden.
 2. To cause to fly, or to float in the air; as, "To fly a kite."
FLY, n. [A. S. fleoga, or flig; fleogan, to fly; Dut. vlieg; Ger. fliege; Dan. flue; Icel. & Sw. fluga.]
 1. (Ent.) A name popularly applied to all insects possessing wings, but restricted by entomologists to those insects which have two transparent wings, of which the common house-fly is the most familiar species. Eng. Cyc.
 2. (Mech.) A cross with leaden weights at its ends, or a heavy wheel at right angles to the axis of a windlass, jack, &c., to equalize the motion; a fly-wheel. Wilkins.
 3. That part of a vane which points out the direction of the wind. Johnson.
 4. A light public carriage, or stage-coach, formed for quickness in travelling. Todd.
 5. That part of a flag which extends from the union to the extreme end.
 The union of the U. S. flag is a blue field with white stars, and the fly is composed of alternate white and red stripes. Dana.
 6. (Naut.) That part of a compass on which the thirty-two points are drawn, and to which the needle is attached underneath; the compass card. Craig.
 7. (Printing.) Formerly, one employed to take the sheets from the press; now, that part of the machinery of a printing-press which withdraws the sheet and lays it aside after the impression is made.
 8. An artificial insect made of bright feathers, silk, &c., for the use of anglers. Simmonds.
FLY-BÄNE, n. (Bot.) A plant of the genus Silene; catch-fly. Lee.
FLY-BIT-TEN (flī'bit-tēn), a. Bitten by flies. Shak.
FLY-BLÖW (flī'blō), n. The egg of a fly.
FLY-BLÖW, v. a. To taint with the eggs of a fly; to fill with maggots. Pope.
FLY-BLÖWN, p. a. Tainted with maggots. Swift.
FLY-BÖAT (flī'bot), n. [flying and boat; Fr. flibot; Sp. flibote.]
 1. A large, flat-bottomed, Dutch-built vessel, with a high stem; used chiefly in the coasting trade. Purchas.
 2. A long boat used on canals. Simmonds.
FLY-CÄSE, n. A case or covering of an insect. Ray.
FLY-CÄTCH-ER, n. 1. One that catches flies. Dryden.
 2. (Ornith.) A bird of the genus Muscicapa;—so named because it feeds on insects which it catches while on the wing. Yarrell.
FLY-ER, n. See FLIER.
FLY-ERS, or FLI-ERS, n. pl. (Arch.) A straight row of steps or stairs; fliers. Francis.
FLY-FISH, v. n. To angle by baiting with a fly, either natural or artificial. Walton.

FLY-FISH-ING, n. The act of catching fish with a fly on the hook. Walton.
FLY-FLÄP, n. 1. A fan or flapper to keep flies off. "Fly-flaps to drive away flies." Sheldon.
 2. An instrument to catch flies. Arbuthnot.
FLY-HÖN'EY-SÜC-KLE, n. A shrub; the Lonicera Xylosteum of Linnæus. Craig.
FLY-ING, n. The act of moving or passing through the air with wings. Goodwin.
FLY-ING, p. a. 1. Moving with wings through the air.
 2. Moving swiftly, like a bird on the wing.
FLY-ING-ÄR'MY, n. (Mil.) A strong body of cavalry and infantry always in motion both to cover its own garrisons and to keep the enemy in continual alarm; a flying-camp. Campbell.
FLY-ING-ÄR-TIL'LE-RY, n. (Mil.) Horse artillery; gunners mounted on horseback. Burn.
FLY-ING-BRIDGE, n. 1. A temporary bridge; a bridge of pontoons. P. Cyc.
 2. A bridge consisting of a boat or other vessel, which, being attached by a rope to a buoy moored in the middle of a river, up the stream, is made, by the action of the current, to move across in the arc of a circle, of which the buoy is the centre. Ogilvie.
FLY-ING-BÜT'TRESS, n. (Goth. Arch.) A buttress in the form of an arch, or arched brace, springing from a solid mass of masonry, passing over the roof of a side aisle, and abutting against the springing of another arch which rises from the upper points of abutment of the first. Its office is to act as a counterpoise against the vaulting of the nave. Brande.
FLY-ING-CÄMP, n. (Mil.) A camp or body of troops kept constantly in the field to cover its own garrisons and annoy the enemy; flying-army. Burn.
FLY-ING-CÖL-QRS, n. pl. (Mil.) Colors unfurled and waving in the air. Stoquer.
 To come off with flying colors, to gain a victory; to triumph.
FLY-ING-FISH, n. (Ich.) A fish of the genus Euroci, which, by means of its long pectoral fins, and without any vibratory movement of them, can sustain itself in the air for about half a minute, its longest flight being about two hundred yards. Eng. Cyc.
FLY-ING-FÄR'TY, n. A party of scouts. Burn.
FLY-ING-PIN'ION, n. A sort of fan, which, by beating the air, checks the rapidity of a clock's motion while the weight of the striking part is running down. Buchanan.
FLY-ING-SQUIR'REL, n. (Zool.) A squirrel that flies, or that leaps to a considerable distance, being sustained in the air by means of a membrane connecting the fore and the hind legs, and expanding on each side into a kind of wing. Audubon.
 Virginian flying-squirrel (Pteromys volucella).
FLY-LÄÄF, n. A leaf inserted separately in a book; a blank leaf at the beginning or the end of a book. P. Cyc.
FLY-MÄG-GÖT, n. A maggot bred from the egg of a fly. Ray.
FLY-PÄN-NING, n. A mode of manuring land by folding cattle or sheep in rotation over different parts of it. Simmonds.
FLY-PÖW-DER, n. A powder used for destroying insects. Simmonds.
FLY-RÄIL, n. A brace which turns out to support the leaf of a table. Clarke.
FLY-SHÖÖT-ER, n. One who shoots flies. Clarke.
† FLY-SLÖW, a. Moving slowly. Shak.
FLY-SPÖCK, n. The excrement of a fly. Clarke.
FLY-TIME, n. The season for flies. Dyer.

Flying-fish.

Virginian flying-squirrel (Pteromys volucella).Spotted flycatcher (Muscicapa grisea).

FLY'-TRAP, n. 1. A trap for flies. Goldsmith.
2. (Bot.) A plant the leaves of which have a singular contractile motion by which they catch insects that alight on them; Venus's fly-trap; Dionaea muscipula. Loudon.

FLY'-WHÉEL, n. (Mech.) A large, heavy wheel attached to machinery, to equalize the motion of it; a fly. Francis.

FŌAL (fō), n. [Goth. fūla; A. S. fole; Dut. veulen; Ger. füllen; Dan. ful; Sw. fala.—Gr. πῶλος; L. pullus; It. pulido; Port. poldro; Sp. potro; Fr. poulain.] The offspring of a mare or she-ass; a colt or a filly.

FŌAL, v. a. [i. FOALED; pp. FOALING, FOALED.] To bring forth, as a mare. Shak.

FŌAL, v. n. To bring forth a colt or filly. Mortimer.

FŌAL/FOOT (fō'fūt), n. (Bot.) A plant of the genus Tussilago; colt's-foot. Johnson.

FŌAM, n. [A. S. fām; Ger. faum.] The collection of bubbles which agitation or fermentation gathers on the top of liquor; froth; spume.

FŌAM (fōm), v. a. [i. FOAMED; pp. FOAMING, FOAMED.] To cast out, as froth; to throw forth, as foam:—to cause to foam. Pope.
Raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame. Jude 13.

FŌAM, v. n. To froth; to gather foam; as, "To foam at the mouth."

FŌAM'-BÉAT, a. Lashed by foam or by the waves. Warton.

FŌAM'-CRÉST-ÉD, a. Crested with foam. Clarke.

FŌAM'ING, p. a. Gathering froth; mantling.

FŌAM'ING-LY, ad. With foam; slaveringly; frothily. Sherwood.

FŌAM'LESS, a. Having no foam. Clarke.

FŌAM'Y, a. Covered with foam; frothy; spumous. "Foamy waters." Dryden.

FŌB, n. [Ger. puppe. Skinner, Richardson.]
1. A small pocket; a watch-pocket. Swift.
2. A light blow; a tap. Shak.

FŌB, v. a. [Ger. foppen.] [i. FORBED; pp. FORBING, FORBED.] To cheat; to trick; to defraud.
To job off, to shift off; to delude with a trick. Shak.

FŌ'CAL, a. [Fr. focal.] (Opt.) Belonging to a focus.
Focal distance, or focal length, (Opt.) the distance between the centre of a lens or a mirror and its focus, or the point to which the rays of light converge. Brande.

FŌ'CAL-IZE, v. a. To bring to a focus. P. Cyc.

FŌ'CLE (fō'sil, P. Sm.; fō's'il, K.), n. [It. fucile; Fr. fole.] (Anat.) A bone of the fore-arm, or of the leg between the knee and the ankle.
The tibia and ulna were formerly each called the fœile mayus; the fibula and radius, fœile minus. Dunghison.

FŌ'CL-LÁTE, v. a. [L. focillo.] To nourish. Blount.

†FŌC-IL-LÁ'TION, n. [L. focillo, focillatus, to revive, to cherish; focus, a hearth.] Comfort; support. Bailey.

FŌ'CS, n.; pl. FŌ'CI. [L. fire, a hearth.]
1. (Opt.) The point where rays are collected by a lens or a mirror. Newton.
2. (Geom. & Conic Sections.) A certain point in the parabola, hyperbola, and ellipse, in which rays of light reflected from all parts of the curve meet. Brande.
"In the ellipse, rays proceeding from one focus, and reflected at the curve, pass directly to the other focus. In the parabola, rays proceeding parallel to the axis, and reflected at the curve, pass directly to the focus. In the hyperbola, rays proceeding towards one focus and reflected at the curve go to the other focus." Davies.

The masters of the first form. Dryden.

3. The seat or bed of a hare. Prior.

4. (Printing.) The type set up and locked in a chase, ready for printing.

The outer form contains the pages that are printed on one side of a sheet, as the first and fourth pages of a newspaper; the inner form contains the pages that are printed on the other side of a sheet, as the second and third pages of a newspaper.

When this word signifies a long seat or a class of students, it is universally pronounced with the o as in four, more, &c. It is not a little surprising that none of our dictionaries, except Mr. Smith's and Mr. Nares', take any notice of this distinction in the sound of the o, when the word signifies a seat or class." Walker. — The English orthoepists more recent than Walker, are divided on the pronunciation of the word in this sense.

GEST'URE (jest'yur), n. [L. gestus, bearing; gero, to bear; It. & Sp. gesto; Fr. geste.]

1. The action which accompanies human speech; posture or motion enforcing words, or expression of any mental emotion; gesticulation. "The most wild and extravagant gestures." Cogan.

2. Movement of the body; motion.

Grace was in all her steps, heaven in her eye, In every gesture dignity and love. Milton.

Syn. — Gesture, gesticulation, and action are all terms applied to the body in motion; posture and attitude, to the body in a state of rest. Gesticulation is the act of making gestures; and it is often used to denote a kind of unnatural or extravagant gesture. Action respects the general movements of the body in accordance with the words spoken. Gesture is the indicative of some particular state of mind. Posture and attitude both imply a mode of placing the body, but the posture is either natural or assumed, the attitude is always assumed or represented. Graceful action; suitable or appropriate gestures; violent gesticulation; posture of defence; attitude of defiance or of supplication.

Nay, thou hast got the face of man. Herbert.

To get head, to gain force, strength, or influence. —To get off, to take or put off; —to get rid of. —To get on, to put on. "Get on thy boots." Shak. —To get out, to draw out or forth. —To get over, to surmount; to conquer. —To get up, to prepare; to make ready; as, "To get up an entertainment;" —to print and publish, as a book. "It is thus that the Tours, Travels, and Voyages of the present day are got up." Ch. Ob.

"The work is got up with typographical elegance." N. Brit. Rev. "This publication appears to have been carefully got up." Athenaeum.

8. "To get, in all its significations, both active and neutral, implies the acquisition of something, or the arrival at some state or place by some means; except in the use of the preterite compound, which often implies mere possession, as, he has got a good estate, does not always mean that he has acquired, but barely that he possesses, it. So we say the lady has got black eyes, merely meaning that she has them." Johnson.

Syn.—To get is a term of extensive application, and not restricted to the mode of obtaining. One may be said to get, gain, or win a prize; to get or acquire property; to get or obtain a reward; to get or procure a book; to get or earn a living. A person gains applause, obtains a recompense or an office, and procures a situation by attention or some effort, acquires property by industry or trade, runs a living by labor, wins a prize by chance, and seizes it by force.

GET, v. n. 1. To reach, attain, or arrive at some place, state, or condition; —followed by adverbs or prepositions which variously modify or restrain its meaning.

But cephalus would let nobody get upon him but Alexander the Great. Addison.

2. To become; —followed by an adjective.

The laughing set, like all unthinking men, Bathed and got drunk, then bathed and drank again. Dryden.

3. To gain; to be increased.

Like jewels to advantage set, Her beauty by the simile does get. Waller.

To get asleep, to fall asleep.

9. "There is, perhaps, no word in the English language capable of performing so much labor, and affording at the same time a clear and intelligible sense, as the verb to get." Prof. J. Willard Gibbs.

The following specimen of its capabilities is given by Dr. Withers:—

I got on horseback within ten minutes after I got your letter. When I got to Canterbury, I got a chaise for town; but I got wet through before I got to Canterbury; and I have got such a cold as I shall not be able to get rid of in a hurry. I got to the city about noon, but I got all I got shaken and dressed. I got out into the street of getting a memorial in the house, but I got all I got an answer then, however, I got into the house from the messenger that I should have got to the house at night. I got as I got back to the city, I got my supper, and got to bed. It was not long before I got to sleep. When I got up in the morning, I got my breakfast; and then I got myself dressed, that I might get out in time to get an answer to my memorial. As soon as I got to Canterbury, I got a chaise for town; but I got wet through before I got to Canterbury; and I have got nothing for me to do but to get on.

Dr. Johnson, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, W.
Johnston, Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Barclay, and Bailey place the accent on the first syllable of this word; and only Mr. Nares and Entick on the second.
Mr. Sheridan and Mr. Scott give the a the sound it has in glass. The great majority of suffrages for the accent on the first syllable, which is the more agreeable to the analogy of our own language, is certainly sufficient to keep a plain Englishman in countenance for pronouncing the word in this manner; but, as it is a French word, and a military term, a military man would blush not to pronounce it à la Française; and, notwithstanding the numbers for the other manner, I cannot but think this the most fashionable. Walker.

4. "It is much to be regretted that the second sound [gold] of this word is grown much more frequent than the first. It is not easy to guess at the cause of this unmeaning deviation from the general rule; but the effect is to impoverish the sound of the language, and to add to its irregularities. It has not, however, like some other words, irrevocably lost its true pronunciation. Rhyme still claims its right to the long, open o, as in bold, cold, fold, &c.

"Judges and senate have been bought for gold; Between and love were not to be sold." Pope.

"Now Europe's laurels on their brows behold, But stained with blood, or ill exchanged for gold." Pope.

And solemn speaking, particularly the language of Scripture, indispensably requires the same sound. With these established authorities in its favor, it is a disgrace to the language to suffer indolence and vulgarity to corrupt it into the second sound. But, since it is generally corrupted, we ought to keep this corruption from spreading, by confining it as much as possible to familiar objects and familiar occasions, thus, goldbeater, goldfish, goldfinder, golding, and goldsmith, especially when a proper name, as Dr. Goldsmith, may admit of the second sound of o, but not golden, as the golden age." Walker. The latter authorities are in favor of gold.

1. To judge at random, or without any certain evidence; to conjecture; to divine; to surmise. Should he not very often guess rightly of things to come? Balhigh.

2. To suppose; to believe; to think.

She, guessing that he was a gardener.

John xx. 15, Wickliffe's Trans.

If they would yield us but the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humanely. Shak.

An Hebrew, as I guess, and of our tribe. Milton.

Once in twenty-four hours is enough, and nobody, I guess, will think it too much. Locke.

Guess—The use of this word, as synonymous with to suppose, to believe, to think, has been said to be almost peculiar to New England. It is true that this use of it is very common here—probably much more so than in Great Britain. Lambert, an English traveller, says of the people of New England, "Instead of imagining, supposing, or believing, they always guess at every thing."

"The employment of guess, to express a vast variety of mental processes,—to think, to presume, to suppose, to imagine, to believe, &c., &c.,—was one of the earliest peculiarities of speech observed in America." C. A. Bristed.

Halliwel defines to guess, as used in various dialects in England, to suppose, to believe, and it seems to be used in this manner by Wickliffe, Shakespeare, Milton, and Locke, in the above-cited quotations.—"The greatest abuse of this word," as stated by Mr. Pickering, "is guessing about things well known."

GUESS, v. a. To judge at random; to conjecture; to divine.

Of Dryden's sluggishness in conversation, it is vain to search or guess the cause. Johnson.

Doest thou already single me? I thought Gyves and the mill had tamed thee. Milton.

"Mr. Sheridan and Mr. Scott make the g in this word hard, but Mr. Elphinstone, Dr. Kenrick, and Mr. Perry, with more propriety, make it soft, as I have marked it. Mr. Nares makes the sound doubtful; but this majority of authorities, and agreeableness to analogy, have removed my doubts, and made me alter my former opinion." Walker.

GÝVE (jiv), v. a. To fetter; to shackle. Shak.

H.

H, the eighth letter in the alphabet, is regarded as a note of aspiration, or mark of strong breathing; and it is, by many grammarians, accounted no letter. At the beginning of some words it is mute, as in heir, honor; but in most cases it is articulated, as in hand, head, heart.

It is used to denote an iron rail, which, when cut transversely, presents the form of an H. As a numeral, it denotes in Latin 200, and with a dash over it 200,000.

HÄ, interj. [L.] 1. An expression of wonder, surprise, or sudden exertion.

What says the golden chest? Hä! let me see. Shak.

2. An expression of laughter.

These accounts are so excessively absurd and ridiculous, that they need no other confutation than Hä, ha, ha! Ruy.

HÄP'-PI-NESS, n. 1. The state of being happy; state in which desires are satisfied; enjoyment of pleasure; welfare; felicity; bliss; beatitude.
Happy and happiness are connected with and derived from hap, which is chance. But how unworthy is that word to express any true felicity, of which the very essence is that it excludes hap or chance; that the world neither gave it nor can take it away. Trench.

O happiness, our being's end and aim,
Good, pleasure, ease, content, whatever thy name. Pope.

Happiness consists in the constitution of the habits. The common course of things is in favor of happiness; happiness is the rule, misery the exception. Paley.

The foundation of domestic happiness is faith in the virtue of woman. The foundation of political happiness is faith in the integrity of man. The foundation of all happiness, temporal and eternal, is faith in the goodness, the righteousness, the mercy, and the love of God. Ware.

Since happiness is necessarily the supreme object of our desires, and duty the supreme rule of our actions, there can be no harmony in our being except our happiness coincides with our duty. Whevell.

2. Fortuitous elegance; unstudied grace.

Certain graces and happinesses peculiar to every language. Denham.

Formed by some rule that guides, but not constrains. And finished more through happiness than pains. Pope.

Syn.—Happiness and felicity (from L. felicitas) are nearly or quite synonymous, though somewhat differently applied. Happiness, however, is the more common and familiar term, and is regarded by some as more susceptible of degrees, and not so strong a term as felicity. Bliss, blessedness, and beatitude are all terms of spiritual import, used to denote the happiness of heaven. Earthly happiness; domestic felicity; heavenly bliss.—See PLEASURE.

HÄP'PY, a. [W. hapus, happy.—See HAP.]

1. Having the desires satisfied; being in a state of felicity; felicitous; blessed; blissful; joyous.

The word happy is a relative term: in strictness, any condition may be denominated happy in which the amount of pleasure exceeds that of pain. Paley.

2. Lucky; successful; fortunate; prosperous.

And fear supplied him with this happy thought. Dryden.

3. Skilful; ready; adroit; expert.

One gentleman is happy at reply, and another excels in rejoinder. Swift.

Syn.—Happy is a common, familiar term; felicitous (from L. felix) is comparatively little used. Fortunate and lucky include the idea of chance, and exclude the idea of personal effort. A happy marriage or condition; a felicitous undertaking; a successful enterprise; prosperous business; a fortunate occurrence; a lucky escape.—See AUSPICIOUS, FORTUNATE.

Social duties are carried to greater heights by the principles of our religion. Addison.

† "The first of these modes [hīt] is the most general, and the last [hā] the most agreeable to the spelling. Milton was the patron of the first, and, in his zeal for analogy, as Dr. Johnson says, spelt the word height. This is still the pronunciation of the vulgar, and seems, at first sight, the most agreeable to analogy; but, though the sound of the adjective high is generally preserved in the abstract height, the h is always placed before the t, and is perfectly mute. Mr. Garrick's pronunciation (and which is certainly the best) was hite. — See DROUGHT." Waller.

HEIGHT'EN (hī'm), v. a. [i. HEIGHTENED; pp. HEIGHTENING, HEIGHTENED.]

1. To raise; to elevate; to exalt; to enhance. Heightened in their thoughts beyond All doubt of victory. Milton.

|| "Mr. Sheridan gives the long sound of e to the first syllable of this word, contrary to every dictionary, to analogy, and, I think, the best usage; which, if I am not mistaken, always gives the first syllable of this word the sound of slender a. That this was the sound of this syllable formerly, we may gather from the spelling of it; for, in Charles the Second's time, Mr. Baxter is accused by Mr. Danvers of publishing the heinous charge against the Baptists of baptizing naked." Walker.

Syn. — Heinous, flagrant, flagitious, and atrocious are epithets applied to crimes and violations of the moral law. Heinous sin; flagrant deed; flagitious conduct; atrocious murder; wicked action or person. — See WICKED.

2. One employed in tending herds. Milton.

HÉRE, ad. [M. Goth. her; A. S. her; Ger. hier; Dan. her; Sw. här; Icel. hér.]

1. In this place; as, "He lives here." Milton.

2. In the present state. "Happy here, and more happy hereafter." Bacon.

3. A kind of exclamation, as in drinking a health. "Here's to the king." Prior.

It is also much used in the sense of to this place, instead of hither; and thus use may be regarded as in a measure sanctioned by common usage. "Here to return." Goldsmith. — It has, heretofore, been much used as a sort of pronominal adverb, prefixed to a proposition; as, hereby, heren, &c.; and it still continues to be more or less so used, though most of these forms have now become somewhat antiquated.

Here and there, in one place and another; irregular. — Neither here nor there, neither in one place nor another; nowhere; — not to the purpose.

Syn. — See HERETODOXY.

HÈR-È-TIC, n. [Gr. αἱρετικός, heretical; It. eretico; Sp. heretico; Fr. hérétique.] One who adopts and propagates heretical opinions; one given to heresy; a sectary. "No heretic or schismatic." Bacon.

Syn. — A heretic is a maintainer of heresy; a schismatic, a promoter of schism; a sectarian, sectary, or sectarist, a member of a sect; a dissenter, one who dissents from an established religion or church; a nonconformist, one who does not conform to an established religion or church. Some of these ecclesiastical terms are differently used by different persons, and in different countries. Roman Catholics apply the term heretic to all Protestants. The terms dissenter and nonconformist are applicable to a part of the inhabitants of Great Britain, where there is an established form of religion; but they are not applicable to any in this country. These several terms are often used as terms of reproach, in a greater or less degree; but schismatic and heretic are terms of greater reproach than the others.

1. A plane which is a tangent to the earth's surface at the place of the spectator, extended on all sides till it is bounded by the sky;—called the sensible horizon. Brande.

2. An imaginary great circle, whose plane passes through the centre of the earth, whose poles are the zenith and nadir, and which divides the globe or sphere into two equal parts or hemispheres;—being parallel to the sensible horizon, and called the rational horizon. Brande.

“This word was, till of late years, universally pronounced, in prose, with the accent on the first syllable; and Shakespeare, says Dr. Johnson, has improperly placed it so in verse:—

When the morning sun shall raise his car
Above the borders of this horizon,
We'll forward towards Warwick and his mates.

With respect to the propriety of this pronunciation, it may be observed that there is scarcely any thing more agreeable to the genuine analogy of English orthoepy than placing the accent on the first syllable of a trisyllable when the middle syllable does not end with a consonant. But another rule, almost as constantly, counteracts this analogy;—when the word is perfectly Latin or Greek, and the accent is on the penultimate, then we generally follow the accentuation of those languages. Poets have so universally placed the accent on the second syllable of this word, and this pronunciation has so classical an air, as to render the other accentuation vulgar.” Walker.

[Gr. ὑδροκήλη; ὕδωρ, water, and κύλη, a tumor; L. hydrocele; Fr. hydrocèle.] (Med.) A collection of watery or serous fluid in the scrotum or in some of the coverings of the testicle or spermatic cord. Dunglison.

HY-DRQ-CÈPH'A-LÜS, n. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water, and κεφαλή, head.] (Med.) A collection of water within the head; dropsy of the brain. Dunglison.

HY-DRQ-ÈHLÖ'RATE, n. [Fr.] (Chem.) A salt formed by the union of hydrochloric acid with a base; a muriate. Graham.

HY-DRQ-ÈHLÖ'RIC, a. [Fr. hydrochlorique.] (Chem.) Noting an acid composed of one equivalent of chlorine and one of hydrogen; — commonly called muriatic acid. Ure.

HY-DRQ-ÈHLÖ'RIDE, n. (Chem.) A compound of hydrogen, chlorine, and carbon. Buchanan.

HY-DRQ-CY'A-NATE, n. (Chem.) A compound of hydrocyanic acid with a base. Wright.

HY-DRQ-CY-ÄN'IC, a. [Eng. hydrogen and Gr. κίανος, a dark blue substance.] (Chem.) Noting an acid which is the same as prussic acid; — first obtained from Prussian blue. Brande.

HY-DRQ-DY-NÄM'ICS, n. pl. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water, and δύναμις, power.] The science which applies the principles of dynamics to determine the conditions of motion or of rest in fluid bodies. It comprises hydrostatics and hydraulics. Brande.

HY-DRQ-FÈR-RO-CY-ÄN'IC, a. (Chem.) Noting an acid obtained by decomposing ferrocyanide of barium with sulphuric acid. Graham.

HY-DRQ-FLÜ'ATE, n. A salt formed of hydrofluoric acid and a base. Craig.

HY-DRQ-FLÜ-ÖR'IC, a. [hydrogen and fluorine.] (Chem.) Noting a highly corrosive and very volatile acid obtained from fluor spar by the action of sulphuric acid. Brande.

HY-DRQ-FLÜ-Q-SIL'I-CATE, n. (Chem.) A salt formed by hydrofluosilicic acid and a base. Craig.

HY-DRQ-FLÜ-Q-SI-LIC'IC, a. [hydrogen, fluorine, and silica.] (Chem.) Noting a compound acid consisting of one atom of hydrofluoric, and two of silicic acid. Craig.

HY'DRO-GEN (hi'dro-jen), n. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water, and γεννέω, to generate; Fr. hydrogène.] (Chem.) A gas which, combined with oxygen, in the proportion of one part by weight of hydrogen to eight parts of oxygen, produces water. It is colorless, tasteless, inodorous, inflammable, and it will not support animal life. Its specific gravity, as compared with common air, is as 69 to 1000, and it is exactly sixteen times lighter than oxygen. It was formerly called inflammable air. Brande.

HY'DRO-GE-NÄTE, v. a. [Fr. hydrogèner.] To combine with hydrogen. Craig.

HY'DRO-GE-NIZE, v. a. To hydrogenate. Craig.

HY-DRQ-GE-NOÜS, a. Relating to hydrogen; composed of hydrogen. Phillips.

HY-DRQ-GE-NQ-SY, n. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water, and γένσις, knowledge.] The history and description of the waters of the earth. Wright.

HY-DRQ-RA-PHER, n. One versed in hydrography; one who makes or plans charts. Boyle.

HY-DRQ-GRÄPH'IC, } a. Relating to hydrog-HY-DRQ-GRÄPH'I-CAL, } raphy. Davies.

HY-DRQ-RA-PHY, n. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water, and γράφω, to describe; Fr. hydrographie.] The science, knowledge, or description of the watery part of the terraqueous globe. Hackluyt.

HY-DRQ-Ü-RÉT, n. (Chem.) A compound of hydrogen with a metal. Brande.

HY'DRÖID, a. (Zool.) Hydra-like. Agassiz.

HY'DRO-LITE, n. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water and λίθος, a stone.] (Min.) See Gmelinite. Dana.

HY-DRQ-LÖG'I-CAL, a. Relating to hydrology. Hackluyt.

HY-DRÖL'Q-GIST, n. One skilled in hydrology. Brande.

HY-DRÖL'Q-QY, n. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water, and λόγος, a discourse; Fr. hydrologie.] The science which treats of water, and of its various properties and modes of existence in nature. Brande.

HY'DRO-MÄN-CY, n. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water, and μαντεία, prophecy.] Among the ancients, a method of divination by water. Brande.

HY-DRQ-MÄN'TIC, a. Pertaining to divination by water. Wright.

HY'DRO-MÈL, n. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water, and μέλι, honey.] A liquor consisting of honey and water; — called also, after fermentation, mead. Brande.

HY-DRÖM'E-TER, n. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water, and μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument for measuring the specific gravities or densities of liquids. Brande.

The common hydrometer consists of a glass tube containing a marked paper scale, with a small bulb at the lower end filled with shot, and a larger bulb just above the other. The zero mark of the scale is adjusted to the point of the stem to which the instrument sinks in distilled water, or in any other liquid taken as a standard.

HY-DRQ-MÈT'RIC, } a. [Fr. hydrométrique.]
HY-DRQ-MÈT'RI-CAL, } Relating to hydrometry.

HY-DRQ-MÈT'RO-GRÄPH, n. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water, μέτρον, a measure, and γράφω, to describe.] An instrument for measuring the quantity of water discharged in a given time. Dr. Black.

HY-DRÖM'E-TRY, n. [Fr. hydrométrie.] The art of measuring the relative densities, or specific gravities, &c., of fluids. P. Cyc.

HY-DRQ-PÄTH'IC, } a. Relating to hydrop-HY-DRQ-PÄTH'I-CAL, } athy. Claridge.

HY-DRÖP'A-TUIST, n. One who is versed in, or who practises, hydrophathy; one who practises the water-cure; a water-doctor. Claridge.

HY-DRÖP'A-THY, n. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water, and πάθος, suffering.] (Med.) Water-cure, or the method of curing diseases by means of water; — introduced by Vincent Priessnitz of Silesia. Claridge.

HY'DRO-PHÄNE, n. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water, and φαῖνω, to show.] (Min.) A variety of opal which is white and opaque when dry, but transparent in water. Brande.

HY-DRÖPH'A-NOÜS, a. (Min.) Noting a mineral transparent in water. Cleaveland.

HY'DRO-PHID, n. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water, and φίδιον, a small serpent.] (Zool.) A species of ophidian including the water snake. Smart.

HY'DRO-PHÖ'B'I-A [hi'dro-fö-bé-a, W. P. J. E. F. Jä. Sm. W. Jä.; hi'dro-fö-bé-a, S. Jä.; n. [L. from Gr. ὑδροφοβία; ὕδωρ, water, and φόβος, fear; Fr. hydrophobie.]

1. (Med.) A preternatural dread of water, a symptom of canine madness. Dunglison.

2. The disease occasioned by inoculation with the saliva of a rabid animal; — so called from the violent and suffocating spasms of the throat which occur when the patient attempts to drink, or when, in the latter stages, the mere idea of drinking arises in his mind. P. Cyc.

HY-DRQ-PHÖB'IC, a. [Gr. ὑδροφοβικός; L. hydrophobicus; Fr. hydrophobe.] Relating to hydrophobia. Med. Jour.

HY'DRO-PHÖ-BY, n. Hydrophobia. Birch.

HY'DRO-PHÖRE, n. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water, and φέρω, to bear.] An instrument for obtaining specimens of the water of a river, a lake, or the ocean at any particular depth. Ogilvie.

HY-DRQPH-THÄL'MI-A, } n. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water,
HY-DRQPH-THÄL'MY, } and θάλαμῶς, the eye.]

(Med.) A disease of the eye, caused by an increase in one or both of the humors. Dunglison.

HY'DRO-PHYTE, n. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water, and φυτόν, a plant; Fr. hydrophyte.]

1. (Bot.) A plant which thrives in water; a kind of alga. Brande.

2. (Min.) A variety of serpentine. Dana.

HY-DRÖPH-Y-TÖL'Q-QY, n. [Eng. hydrophyte and Gr. λόγος, a discourse.] A discourse or treatise on water-plants. Craig.

HY-DRÖP'IC, } a. [Gr. ὑδροπικός; L. hydropi-
HY-DRÖP'I-CAL, } cus; Fr. hydropique.]

1. Dropsical; diseased with dropsy or extravasated water. "Hydropic wretches." Blackmore.

2. Resembling dropsy. "Every lust is a kind of hydropic distemper." Tillotson.

HŶ-DRŌP'I-CAL-LŶ, ad. In an hydropical manner. Browne.

HŶ-DRŌ-PNEŪ-MĀT'IC (-nū-), a. [Gr. ὑδρῶς, water, and πνευματικός, belong to wind or breath.] Noting an apparatus consisting of a vessel of water, &c., for collecting gases. Wright.

HŶ-DRŌP-SŶ, n. [Gr. ὑδρῶς; L. hydrops.] The dropsy. Thomson.

HŶ-DRŌ-SĀLT, n. (Chem.) A salt, the base or the acid of which is a compound, having hydrogen as one of its elements. Wright.

HŶ-DRŌ-SCŌPE, n. [Gr. ὑδρῶς, water, and σκοπεῖν, to view.] An instrument anciently used for measuring time, by the flowing of water through a small orifice. Brande.

HŶ-DRŌ-STĀT, n. An apparatus for preventing the explosion of steam-boilers. Simmonds.

HŶ-DRŌ-STĀT'IC, } a. [Gr. ὑδρῶς, water, and HŶ-DRŌ-STĀT'IC-CAL, } στατική, statics; Fr. hydrostatique.] Relating to hydrostatics.

Hydrostatic balance, a balance used for determining the specific gravity of bodies, by weighing them in water. — Hydrostatic bellows, an apparatus for illustrating the hydrostatic paradox, consisting of two flat boards united by leather or flexible cloth, which is water-tight, and a long upright tube through which water may be poured into the interior, thus causing every portion of the surface of the upper board, equal in area to the area of the tube, to be pressed upward by a force equal to the weight of the water in the tube above the level of that board. Brande. — Hydrostatic paradox, the fact that any quantity of water, however small, may be made to lift and balance any quantity however great, or that quality of liquids in virtue of which they transmit pressure equally in all directions; — thus water, in a curved pipe open at both ends, will always rise to the same height in each arm or branch, however much larger one may be than the other. — Hydrostatic press, the hydraulic press. — See HYDRAULIC PRESS.

HŶ-DRŌ-STĀT'IC-CAL-LŶ, ad. According to hydrostatics. Bentley.

HŶ-DRŌ-STA-TĪ'CIAN (-tish'an), n. One versed in hydrostatics. Boyle.

HŶ-DRŌ-STĀT'ICS, n. The science which explains the properties of the equilibrium and pressure of water and other fluids; the application of statics to the peculiar constitution of water and other liquids. Brande.

HŶ-DRŌ-SŪL'PHATE, a. [Fr. hydrosulphate.] (Chem.) Same as HYDROSULPHURET. Brande.

HŶ-DRŌ-SŪL'PHITE, n. (Chem.) A saline compound of hydrosulphurous acid and a base. Cve.

HŶ-DRŌ-SUL-PHŪ'RIC, a. [Fr. hydrosulfurique.] (Chem.) Noting an acid otherwise called sulphuretted hydrogen. Brande.

HŶ-DRŌ-TEL-LŪ'RATE, n. (Chem.) A salt formed by the union of telluric acid with a base. Wright.

HŶ-DRŌ-TEL-LŪ'RIC, a. (Chem.) Noting an acid formed from hydrogen and tellurium. Graham.

HŶ-DRŌ-THŌ'RĀX, n. [Gr. ὑδρῶς, water, and θώραξ, the chest.] (Med.) Dropsy of the chest; — generally seated only on one side. Dunghison.

HŶ-DRŌT'IC, n. [Gr. ὑδρῶς, water; Fr. hydro-tique.] (Med.) Medicine to expel water or phlegm; a hydragogue. Arbuthnot.

HŶ-DRŌT'IC, } a. Causing the discharge of HŶ-DRŌT'IC-CAL, } water or phlegm. Smart.

HŶ-DROUS, a. Containing water; watery. Francis.

HŶ-DROX-ĀN'THATE, n. [Gr. ὑδρῶς, water, and ξανθός, yellow.] (Chem.) A compound of hydroxanthic acid with a base. Wright.

HŶ-DROX-ĀN'THIC, a. (Chem.) Noting an acid called also carbo-sulphuric acid, formed by the action of alkalies on the deutosulphuret of carbon. Wright.

HŶ-DRŪ-RĒT, n. Same as HYDROGURET. Brande.

HŶ'DRŪS, n. [L., from Gr. ὑδρῶς, water.]

1. (Zool.) A genus of water-snakes. Eng. Cyc.

2. (Astron.) The Water-Serpent, a southern constellation. Wright.

HŶ-Ē'MĀL, or HŶ-Ē-MĀL [hī-ē'māl, W. K. Sm. IVb.; hī-ē-māl, Ja. Towd. Ash, Dyche], a. [L. hyemalis; hyems, winter; It. iemale; Sp. hiemal; Fr. hyemal.] Belonging to winter. Browne.

† HŶ'ĒN, n. A hyena. "I will laugh like a hyen." Shak.

HŶ-Ē'NĀ, n. [Gr. ἡiena; L. hyena.] (Zool.) One of a family of digitigrade, carnivorous quadrupeds, of great strength and ferocity, found in Asia and Africa, having the fore legs longer than the hind legs, a rough tongue, great and conical molar teeth, projecting eyes, large ears, and a deep and glandular pouch beneath the anus; — called also tiger-wolf. Eng. Cyc.

HŶ-Ē-TŌ-GRĀPH, n. [Gr. ἑρως, rain, and γράφω, to sketch.] A graphic representation of the average distribution of rain over the surface of the earth. Nichol.

HŶ-Ē-TŌ-GRĀPH'IC, a. (Phys. Geog.) Noting maps in which the distribution and quantity of rain, prevalence of rainy days, &c., in different places, are indicated. Johnston.

HŶ-Ē-TŌM'Ē-TER, n. [Gr. ἑρως, rain, and μέτρον, a measure.] A pluviometer. Nichol.

HŶ-Ē'Ē-I-A (hī-jē'ya), n. [Gr. Ἥγεια.] 1. (Myth.) The goddess of health. 2. (Astron.) An asteroid discovered by De Gasparis in 1850. Hind.

HŶ-Ē-Ē'IAN (hī-jē'yan), a. Relating to health, or to Hygeia, Hygiea, or Hygia, the goddess of health. Smart.

HŶ-Ē-Ē-INE, n. See HYGIENE. Brande.

HŶ-Ē-Ē-NĪSM, n. The science of health, or the preservation of health by medical treatment; hygiene. Buchanan.

HŶ-Ē-Ē-IST, n. One versed in hygiene. Gent. Mag.

HŶ-Ē-Ē'AN, a. Same as HYGEIAN. P. Cyc.

HŶ-Ē-Ē'NAL, a. Relating to hygienism, or the preservation of health; hygienic. Boyle.

HŶ-Ē-Ē-ĒNE, or HŶ-Ē-Ē-ĒNE, n. [Generally anglicized hygiene, and pronounced hygeen. Dunghison.] (Gr. ὑγιεινός, good for the health; ὑγιεία, health; Fr. hygiène.] (Med.) That branch of medicine of which the object is the preservation of health. Dunghison.

HŶ-Ē-Ē-Ē'IC, a. [Fr. hygiénique.] Relating to hygiene; preserving health. Dunghison.

HŶ-Ē-Ē-Ē'ICS, n. pl. The art of preserving health; hygienism; hygiene. [R.] Dunghison.

HŶ-Ē-Ē'NĀ, n. (Med.) Same as HYGIENE. Crabb.

HŶ-Ē-Ē-Ē'Q-ĒY, n. [Gr. ὑγιεία, health, and λόγος, a discourse.] (Med.) The science of, or a treatise on, the preservation of health. O. H. Curtis.

HŶ-GRŌ-BLĒPH'Ā-RIC, a. [Gr. ὕψος, moist, and βλέφαρον, the eyelid.] (Med.) Noting the excretory ducts of the lachrymal gland. Wright.

HŶ-GRŌL'Q-ĒY, n. [Gr. ὕψος, moist, fluid, and λόγος, a discourse.] (Med.) The doctrine of the humors or fluids of the body. Brande.

HŶ-GRŌM'Ē-TER, n. [Gr. ὕψος, moist, and μέτρον, a measure; Fr. hygromètre.] An instrument to measure the degrees of moisture or dryness of the atmosphere. Brande.

HŶ-GRŌ-MĒT'RIC, } a. [Fr. hygrométrique.]
HŶ-GRŌ-MĒT'RI-CAL, } Relating to hygrometry; — applied to substances which readily become moist or dry by corresponding changes of the state of the atmosphere. Brande.

HŶ-GRŌM'Ē-TRY, n. [See HYGROMETER.] The art of measuring the moisture or humidity of bodies, particularly of the atmosphere. Crabb.

HŶ'GRŌ-SCŌPE, n. [Gr. ὕψος, moist, and σκοπεῖν, to view.] An instrument to show the moisture and dryness of the air; a hygrometer. Quincy.

HŶ-GRŌ-SCŌP'IC, } a. Imbibing moisture,
HŶ-GRŌ-SCŌP'IC-CAL, } as a hygroscope; relating to the hogsroscope.

HŶ-GRŌ-SCŌ-PŪ'Q'Ē-TŶ, n. [Gr. ὕψος, moisture, and σκοπεῖν, to observe.] (Bot.) The property by which vegetable tissues absorb or discharge moisture, according to circumstances. Henslow.

HŶ-GRŌ-STĀT'ICS, n. pl. [Gr. ὕψος, moist, and στατική, statics.] The art of measuring degrees of moisture. Evelyn.

HŶKE, n. [Arab.] A loose garment worn by the Arabs; haik. Wright.

HŶ-LĒ-Q-SĀUR'US, n. [Gr. ἑλαῖος, belonging to a wood, and σαῦρος, a lizard.] (Pal.) An extinct genus of gigantic reptiles found in the walden strata of Sussex, Eng. Mantell.

HŶ-LĒRĒH'Ē-CAL, a. [Gr. ἑλη, matter, and ἀρχι-κός, pertaining to rule.] Presiding over matter. "This hylarchical principle." Hallivell.

HŶ'LO-BATE, n. [Gr. ὀλοβάτης, one that walks or haunts the wood; ἑλη, a wood, and βαίω, to walk.] (Zool.) One of a genus of apes; the long-armed ape or gibbon. Van Der Hoeven.

HŶ'LO-IST, n. [Gr. ἑλη, matter.] One who believes that matter is God. Clarke.

HŶ-LŌP'Ā-THĪSM, n. [Gr. ἑλη, matter, and πάθος, feeling.] The tenet or doctrine that the life of matter is sentient. Brande.

HŶ-LŌTH'Ē-ISM, or HŶ-LO-THĒ'ISM, n. [Gr. ἑλη, matter, and θεός, God.] The doctrine that matter is God, a species of materialism. Smart.

HŶ-LŌ-ZŌ'IC, a. Pertaining to hylozoism. Wright.

HŶ-LŌ-ZŌ'IC, n. One who holds all matter to be animated. Clarke.

HŶ-LŌ-ZŌ'ISM, n. [Gr. ἑλη, matter, and ζωή, life.] The doctrine that all matter lives; the theory of the soul of the world, or of a life residing in nature; the doctrine that life and matter are inseparable. Cudworth. Fleming.

HŶ-LŌ-ZŌ'IST, n. An advocate for hylozoism; a hylozoic. Tucker.

HŶ'MĒN, n. [Gr. ὑμῆν; L. & Fr. hymen.] 1. (Myth.) The god of marriage. 2. (Anat.) The vaginal membrane at the outer orifice of the vagina. Dunghison. 3. (Bot.) A skin enclosing the bud of a flower.

|| HŶ-MĒ-NĒ'AL, a. Pertaining to marriage. Pope. "In these compounds of Hymen, Mr. Sheridan has shortened the i in the first syllable; but, though I think this tendency of the secondary accent to shorten the vowel perfectly agreeable to analogy, yet y has so frequently the sound of long i, that it seems, in this case and some others, to counteract that tendency; nor can any other reason be given why the same letter in hyperbolic and hypercritic should be long, as Mr. Sheridan has properly marked them. Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Buchanan, and Mr. Perry, by their notation, seem of the same opinion." Walker.

|| HŶ-MĒ-NĒ'AN, n. Same as HYMENEAL. [R.] And heavenly choirs the hymenean sung. Milton.

|| HŶ-MĒ-NĒ'AN, a. Same as HYMENEAL. [R.]

HY-MĒ-NĒ-ŪM, n. (Bot.) That part of fungi in which the spores immediately lie. Henslow.

HŶ-MĒN-ŌP'TĒ-RĀ, } n. pl. [Gr. ὑμενόπτερος; HŶ-MĒN-ŌP'TĒ-RS, } ὑμῆν, a membrane, and πτερόν, a wing; It. imenoptero; Fr. hyménoptère.] (Ent.) An order of mandibulate insects, comprehending those having four membranous wings, with few nervures, such as bees, wasps, &c. Brande.

HY-MEN-ÖP'TE-RAL, } a. [Gr. hymenion, dim. of HY-MEN-ÖP'TE-ROÜS, } hymen, a membrane, and πτερον, a wing.] (Ent.) Having membranous wings; — applied to certain insects. Kirby.

HY-MEN-ÖP'TE-RAN, n. (Ent.) A mandibulate insect having four membranous wings. Brande.

HYMN (him), n. [Gr. hymnos, a song or ode, usually in praise of some god or hero; L. hymnus; It.
inno; Sp. hymno; Fr. hymne.] A song of praise, adoration, or thanksgiving; — now commonly applied to a short poem written to be sung in public religious services.

ing in hymns. "The hymning choir." West.

HYMNING, n. The singing of hymns.
Thus they in heaven, above the starry sphere,
Their happy hours in joy and hymning spent. Milton.

HYMNODY, n. [Gr. hymnōdia.] A collection of hymns; hymnology. Brit. Crit.

HYMNÖGRA-PHER, n. A writer of hymns. Bailey.

HYMNÖLÖGIST, n. A composer of hymns.

HYMNÖLÖGY, n. [Gr. hymnos, a song, and lógos, a discourse, Fr. hymnologie.] A collection of hymns; hymnody. Mede.

HYMÖID, a. [Gr. v. the letter upsilon, and idos, form; úsōidos.] (Anat.) Noting a bone at the base of the tongue having the form of the Greek letter v. Dunghison.

HY-ÖS-CY-Ä-MI-Ä, n. (Chem.) A vegetable alkali, extracted from the Ilyoscyamus niger, pigs-bean, of henbane. Brande.

HY-ÖS-CY-Ä-MINE, n. (Chem.) The active principle of henbane. Hamilton.

HYPP, v. a. [i. HYPPED; pp. HYPPING, HYPPED.]
To make melancholy; to dispirit; to hip.
I have been to the last degree hypped since I saw you. Spectator.

A colloquial word, contracted from hypochondriac;
— often written hip. This contraction, and also hyppo, are colloquially used as nouns. — See HIP.

HYF, n. [Contracted from hypochondriasis.] Depression of spirits; melancholy. [Colloquial.]
Heaven send thou hast not got the hyfs. Swift.

HY-PÆ-THRAL, a. [Gr. hupaiθros, under the open sky; hup, under, and alθros, the air.] (Arch.) Noting a building or temple without a roof, as the temple of Neptune at Pæstum. Brande.

HY-PÄL-LÄ-GÆ, n. [Gr. hupallagē; hupallāssō, to interchange; L. & Fr. hypallage.] (Gram. & Rhet.) A species of inversion in which not only the natural or customary succession of words is changed, but the sense presents a species of transposition in which predicates are transferred from their proper subject to another; as,
"Gladium vagina vacuum," the sword empty of the scabbard. Brande.

HY-PÄR-GY-RITE, n. [Gr. hupargyros, containing silver; hup, under, and argyros, silver.] (Min.)
A sulphuret of antimony and silver. Dana.

HY-PÄS-PIST, n. [Gr. hupaspistes.] A shield-bearer; — a soldier of ancient Greece. Mitford.

HY-PÆR- [Gr. hup.] A Greek prefix, implying over, beyond, excess. — In the compound terms of chemistry, it corresponds with super, as used in other cases.

† HY-PÆR, n. [A contraction of hypercritical.] A hypercritic. Prior.

† HY-PÆR-ÄS-PIST, n. [Gr. hupaspistes.] A defender; a protector. Chillingworth.

HY-PÆR-BÄT'IC, a. Transposed; inverted. Clarke.

HY-PÆR-BÄ-TÖN, n. [L., from Gr. hupēbāron; hupēbāro, to transgress.] (Rhet.) A figure in and bállō, to throw; L. hyperbola.] (Geom.)

One of the conic sections, formed by cutting a cone by a plane, which is so inclined to the axis, that, when produced, it cuts also the opposite cone, or the cone which is the continuation of the former, on the opposite side of the vertex; a plane curve such that the difference of the distances from any point of it to two fixed points, called foci, is equal to a given distance. Brande. Davies & Peck.

HY-PÆR-BQ-LÆ, n. [L., from Gr. hupēbolē; hupē, bállō, to go beyond, to exceed; L. & Fr. hyper- bole.] (Rhet.) A figure by which expressions are used signifying more than the exact truth, or more than is intended to be represented to the hearer or the reader, or by which a thing is represented greater or less, better or worse, than it really is; exaggeration.

Our common forms of compliment are almost all of them extravagant hyperboles. Blair.

HY-PÆR-BÖL'IC-ÄL, } hyperbolicus; Fr. hyper- bolique.]

1. Belonging to, or having the nature of, an hyperbola. "Hyperbolic lines." Grew.

2. Relating to an hyperbole; exaggerating or extenuating; as, "Hyperbolic language."

A Hyperbolic logarithm, a system of logarithms called also Naperian logarithms, the base of which is 2.718281. They are so named on account of their relation to the area between the hyperbola and its asymptote. Da. & F. — Hyperbolic space, the space or content comprehended between the curve of the hyperbola and the whole ordinate. Maunder.

HY-PÆR-BÖL'IC-ÄL-LY, ad. In a hyperbolic manner.

HY-PÆR-BÖL'IC-FÖRM, a. Having the form of the hyperbola. Johnson.

HY-PÆR-BQ-LISM, n. The quality of being hyperbolic; hyperbole. Bp. Horsley.

HY-PÆR-BQ-LIST, n. One who hyperbolizes. Boyle.

HY-PÆR-BQ-LIZE, v. n. To make use of hyperbole; to exaggerate. Howell.

cally; to exaggerate, or to extenuate. Fotherby.

HY-PÆR-BQ-LÖID, n. [Eng. hyperbola and Gr. ellōs, form.] A surface whose plane sections are either ellipses or hyperbolas: — a solid formed by revolving an hyperbola about its axis. Blöi.

HY-PÆR-BQ-RE-AN, a. [Gr. hupēboreios; hupē, beyond, and boreas, the north; L. hyperboreus.]
Belonging to, or inhabiting, the most northern regions of the earth; far north; very cold.

HY-PÆR-CÄR-BÜ-RËT-TED, a. (Chem.) Having
the largest proportion of carbon; supercarburetted.
Wright.

HY-PÆR-CÄT-A-LËC'TIC, a. [Gr. hupercatēlecti- kos; L. hypercatalēcticus.] (Pros.) Exceeding the measure; — applied to verses having one or two syllables too many at the end. Andrews.

HY-PÆR-CA-TIÄR'SIS, n. [Gr. hupē, in excess,
and katharsis, purging.] (Med.) Excessive purging; superpurgation. Dunghison.

HY-PÆR-CHLÖRIC, a. [Gr. hupē, in excess, and Eng. chloric.] (Chem.) Noting an acid containing a greater proportion of oxygen than chloric acid; perchloric. Graham.

HY-PÆR-CRIT'IC, n. [Gr. hupē, beyond, and kritikós, critical.] A captious or uncanonid critic; an unreasonable or very exact critic. Dryden.

HY-PÆR-CRIT'IC-ÄL, a. Critical beyond use or reason. "Hypercritical readers." Swift.

HY-PÆR-CRIT'IC-ÄL-LY, ad. In a hypercritical manner. Crocker.

HY-PÆR-CRIT'IC-ÏSE, v. a. To criticise captiously or unreasonably. Ch. Ob.

HY-PÆR-CRIT'IC-ÏSM, n. The act of viewing a work in a captious spirit, and with a disposition

HYTHE (hith), n. [A. S. hyth.] A port; a small haven. — See HITHE. Jodrell.

I.

I, the third vowel and the ninth letter of the alphabet, was formerly confounded with the consonant j, from which it is now kept distinct. It has two principal sounds; one long, as in fine, the other short, as in fin. The long sound is commonly considered diphthongal; — Sheridan makes it consist of a and e; Walker, of a and i; and Smart, of a and e. The short sound is the same as that of short y. — See Principles of Pronunciation, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 44, 45. — In old writers, i was often used for ay, which is pronounced nearly like it.

Did your letters pierce the queen?

I sir; she took 'em and read 'em in my presence. Shak.

— I, prefixed to a word, as ibrought, is the A. S. prepositional particle ge, and is more commonly written y. As a Roman numeral, it signifies 1; and, placed before v or x, it diminishes by a unit the numbers expressed by these two letters.

I, pron. [M. Goth. ik; A. S. ic; Dut. ik; Ger. ich; Dan. jeg; Icel. eg; Sw. jag. — Gr. ἐγώ; L. ego; It. io; Sp. yo; Port. eu; Fr. je. — Sansc. aham; Slav. ja, ga.] [pos. MINE; obj. ME; — pl. nom. WE, pos. OURS, obj. US.] A personal pronoun of the first person and nominative case; myself; the person speaking.

Be of good cheer; it is I; be not afraid. Math. xiv. 27.

IAMB, n. An iambic; an iambus.

The license is sometimes carried so far as to add three short syllables to the last iamb. Brande.

IAMBIC, } a. [Gr. ιαμβικός; L. iambicus; It. iambico; Sp. yambico; Fr. iambique.] Relating to an iambus; composed of iambic feet.

In most modern European languages, the verse of five iambic feet is a favorite metre. Brande.

IAMBIC, n. [Gr. ιαμβος; L. iambus; It. giambò, jambico; Sp. yambico; Fr. iambique.] — "The derivation of the word has never been ascertained; but it can boast of an origin nearly coeval with the Greek language." Brande. — "Referred by Riemer and Pott to ἰάω, to attack, assault, as being the foot or metre first used by satiric writers." Liddell & Scott. (Pros.)

1. A metrical foot consisting of a short syllable followed by a long one; an iambus.

Two rests, a short and long, th' iambic frame.

A foot whose swiftness gave the verse its name. B. Jonson.

2. A verse composed of iambi or iambic feet.

Iambics are a species of verse much used by the Greek and Latin poets, especially by the Greek tragic poets. They were originally used for satire; hence the word sometimes means satire.

Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
In keen iambics, but mild anagram. Dryden.

I-AM-BI-CAL-LY, ad. In the manner of an iambic; according to iambic verse. Ch. Ob.

IDEA, n.; pl. IDEAS. [Gr. ἰδέα, εἶδω, to see; L. it., & Sp. idea; Fr. idée.] 1. Among the ancient Platonists, an eternal, immutable, and immaterial form or model of an object; an archetype; a pattern.

In the Platonic sense, ideas were the patterns according to which the Deity fashioned the phenomenal or ectypal world. Sir W. Hamilton.

Thence to behold this new-created world, The addition of his empire, how it showed In prospect from his throne, how good, how fair, Answering his great idea. Milton.

2. The image or resemblance of an object conceived by the mind; — a term in its widest and now generally received acceptation, employed to indicate every representation of outward objects through the senses, and whatever is the immediate object of thought; conception; perception; notion; thought.

For ideas, in my sense of the word, are, whatsoever is the object of the understanding, when a man thinks; or, whatever it is the mind can be employed about in thinking. Locke.

The word idea, when carefully used, implies precisely that which anciently stood opposed to it, namely, the mental representation of some individual object not present to the senses: in which sense it is less comprehensive than "image," for an image may be a fancied object, but an idea is strictly the mental representation of a real one; and it is also less comprehensive than "conception," for a conception may revive audible or other sensible impressions, but an idea is in strictness confined to the representation of the visible only. Smart.

This word idea is, perhaps, the worst case in the English language; in no other instance, perhaps, is a word so seldom used with any tolerable correctness; in none is the distance so immense between the sublimity of the word in its proper use, and the triviality of it in its slovenly and its popular use. Trench.

How infinite the fall of this word . . . to its present use when this person "has an idea that the train has started," and the other "had no idea that the dinner would be so bad." Trench.

By Descartes, Locke, and many other philosophers, and also in popular language, idea is used to signify a sensation, perception, conception, notion, apprehension, image, thought, opinion, intention; in short, whatever we are at different times mentally conscious of. Fleming.

Syn. — Idea is the image or representation of any thing in the mind; thought, the reflection on it; notion, what we know or think of it. Ideas are faint or vivid, vague or distinct; perceptions, clear or indistinct. Notions are entertained; conceptions are formed. Thoughts and notions are true or false; conceptions, grand or mean, distinct or crude. — See IMAGINATION, PERCEPTION.

IDÉAL, a. [L. idealis; It. ideale; Sp. ideal; Fr. idéal.] 1. Relating to a class of ideas created by, and solely subsisting in, the imagination; existing only in idea; intellectual; imaginary; unreal; fanciful. "Ideal beauty."

2. Pertaining to the philosophy which considers ideas as images interposed between the mind and the object of its thought; belonging or relating to ideas generally. "A relic of the old ideal system." Stewart.

Syn. — Ideal happiness; imaginary good; visionary scheme; mental perception; intellectual exercise.

IDÉAL, n. Something existing in the imagination; any thing imaginary or ideal; conception; notion; idea. [Modern.] De Quincey.

IF, conj. [A. S. gif, if. — Gif, the imperative mood of the A. S. gífan, to give. Skinner. Tooke. Bosworth. — In the cognate languages, if has no connection with the verb to give.
 "The relation between the M. Goth. and A. S. is so intimate, that if this system [that the Eng. conjunctions are merely the imperatives of verbs] had been adopted in one language, it can hardly be supposed that nothing analogous would appear in the other. But gau and jaba signify if in M. Goth., and neither of these seems to have an origin similar to that ascribed to gif. . . The learned three views what he calls the dubitative particle if, gyf, as well as the M. Goth. conjunctions, as allied to Su. Goth. jeſ, dubium. . . . Jeel. ſe-a, to doubt." Jamieson.
 "For the little, virtuous, peace-making particle if, which he [Tooke] places in the front of his array, he appears to have felt a peculiar affection, if we may judge from the pains that he takes to establish its genealogy. In fact we believe that this word was the foundation of his whole system. Having discovered, as he thought, that if is the imperative of give, he naturally enough concluded that other particles might be accounted for by the same process. Accordingly he expends a profusion of labor and perverse ingenuity in detecting imperatives where none ever existed or possibly could. In the present instance, a comparison of the cognate languages proves that if is neither an imperative of give nor of any other verb; consequently any system founded on that basis is a mere castle in the air. It is unnecessary to repeat Dr. Jamieson's statement of the matter, which is, in our opinion, perfectly decisive against Tooke's etymology." R. Garnett.

Syn. — See FANCIFUL, IDEAL.

IM-ÄG-I-NÄ'TION (e-mä-d-jö-nä'shun), n. [L. imaginatio; imago, an image; It. immaginazione; Sp. imaginación; Fr. imagination.]

1. The faculty of the mind by which it either bodies forth the forms of things unknown, or produces original thoughts, or new combinations of ideas, from materials stored up in the memory; fancy; invention.

The sound and proper exercise of the imagination may be made to contribute to the cultivation of all that is virtuous and estimable in the human character. Abercrombie.

The grand storehouse of enthusiastic and meditative imagination, of poetical, as contradistinguished from human and dramatic imagination, are the prophetic and lyrical parts of the Holy Scriptures, and the works of Milton, to which I cannot forbear to add those of Spenser. Wordsworth.

2. An image in the mind; a conception; an idea; a notion.

Sometimes despair darkens all her imaginations. Sidney.

3. Contrivance; scheme; device; plot.

Thou hast seen all their vengeance and all their imaginations against me. Lam. iii. 60.

4. An unsound or fanciful opinion.

We are apt to think that space in itself is actually boundless, to which imagination the idea of space of itself lends us. Locke.

Syn. — Imagination is a term often used as nearly synonymous with fancy; it is, however, properly regarded as a faculty of the mind. Dugald Stewart says, "The faculty of imagination is the great spring of human activity, and the principal source of human improvement."

"The imagination may be said, in its widest sense, to be synonymous with invention, denoting that faculty of the mind by which it either 'bodies forth the form of things unknown,' or produces original thoughts or new combinations of ideas from materials stored up in the memory. The fancy may be considered that peculiar habit of association which presents to our choice all the different materials that are subservient to the efforts of the imagination." Brande.

"When the imagination frames a comparison, if it does not strike on the first presentation, a sense of the truth of the likeness, from the moment it is perceived, grows — and continues to grow — upon the mind; the resemblance depending less upon outline of form and feature than upon expression and effect, — less upon casual and outstanding, than upon inherent internal, properties; — moreover, the images invariably modify each other. The law under which the processes of fancy are carried on, is as capricious as the accidents of things, and the effects are surprising, playful, ludicrous, amusing, tender, or pathetic, as the objects happen to be oppositely produced, or fortunately combined. Fancy is given to quicken and beguile the temporal part of our nature; imagination, to incite and to support the eternal. Yet it is not the less true that fancy, as she is an active, is also, under her own laws and in her own spirit, a creative, faculty. In what manner fancy ambitiously aims at a rivalry with imagination, and imagination stoops to work with the materials of fancy, might be illustrated from the compositions of all eloquent writers, whether in prose or verse." Wordsworth.

"The business of conception is to present us with an exact transcript of what we have felt or perceived. But we have, moreover, a power of modifying our conceptions, by combining the parts of different ones together, so as to form new wholes of our own creation. I shall employ the word imagination to express this power, and I apprehend that this is the proper sense of the word, if imagination be the power which gives birth to the productions of the poet and the painter. The operations of imagination are by no means confined to the materials which conception furnishes, but may be equally employed about all the subjects of our knowledge." Stewart.

An epic poem may be called a work of the imagination; the treatment or finish of certain parts of it, the work of fancy. The pleasures of the imagination, not of fancy. The imagination of the poet; the fancy of the artist. A creative or brilliant imagination; an ingenious or an idle fancy; an elevated conception; a distinct idea; an ingenious contrivance or device.

IM-ÄG'I-NA-TIVE, a. [It. immaginativo; Sp. imaginativo; Fr. imaginatif.] That imagines; that imagines easily or readily; forming mental images; imagining; fancying. "The imaginative faculty." Holland.

IM-MI-GRANT, n. [It. immigrante; Fr. immigrant.] One who immigrates or removes into a country with the intention of fixing his residence there; one who arrives in a country with the intention of remaining; — opposed to emigrant. McCulloch.

IM-MI-GRATE, v. n. [L. immigro, immigratus; in, into, and migro, to migrate; It. immigrare; Sp. emigrar; Fr. immigrer. [i. IMMIGRATED; pp. IMMIGRATING, IMMIGRATED.] To enter into a country in order to dwell in it. Cockeram.

IM-MI-GRÁ'TION, n. [It. immigrazione; Fr. immigration.] The act of immigrating; an entering or passing into a place with the intention of residing in it. Warton, 1774.

“These words [to immigrate, immigration, and immigrant] were first used in this country, I believe,” says Mr. Pickering, “by Dr. Belknap, in his History of New Hampshire.” Dr. Belknap remarks that “the verb to immigrate, and the nouns immigrant and immigration, are used without scruple in some parts of this volume;” though he says, with respect to their use, that it is a “deviation from the strict letter of the English dictionaries.” But the verb to immigrate is found in the old English dictionaries of Cockeram and Bailey, and in several later English dictionaries; and the three words have now the sanction of good English writers.

IM-MI-NÉNCÉ, n. [It. imminenza; Fr. imminence.] Ill impending; near danger. [R.] Shak.

IM-MI-NÉNT, a. [L. immineo, imminens, to hang over, to impend; in, in, and minor, to threaten; It. imminente; Sp. imminente; Fr. imminent.] Threatening closely; ready to fall upon; impending; near at hand. “Judgments imminent.” Milton. “Imminent danger.” Pope.

Three times to-day
You have defended me from imminent death. Shak.
Syn. — Imminent, impending, and threatening are all applied to some evil that is very near; and of these terms imminent is the strongest. Imminent danger is so near that it can hardly be escaped by any exertion; of impending danger one may be warned of so as to escape it; a threatening evil or danger gives intimations of its approach.

IM-MIN'GLE, v. a. [in and mingle.] [i. IMMINGLED; pp. IMMINGLING, IMMINGLED.] To mingle; to mix; to commingle.
